Overview: The DC Tax Revision Commission will host a small-group conversation focusing on tax issues relating to small businesses and other employers. Participants are invited to respond to the following questions:

- Do you see ways that the tax code can be improved (in terms of who it taxes, how it's implemented, or what it affords)?
- Are there ways the DC tax code can do a better job of advancing economic efficiency and competitiveness?
- What are ways that you would recommend making our tax code more resilient to economic changes and shocks?
- What would a fairer tax code look like?
- How can the tax system help improve racial equity?
- Do you have any general or specific ideas about how the city should improve tax administration?
- When there are potential tensions/tradeoffs among our stated principles - for example, if a proposal to increase competitiveness risks reducing progressivity - how should the Commission balance and prioritize? How should the Commission balance and prioritize its various goals and commitments?
- How can the Commission continue to engage the community to collect their ideas and feedback on the DC tax system?

Participants (invited):

- Justin Palmer, Hospital Association
- Susan Nelson and Joel Bryan, MedStar
- Andrew Flagel, Consortium
- Chris Murphy, Georgetown University
- Ron Mason, UDC
